

Dainty drops of pristine white dust dropped from the cloudless sky silently and began to carpet the earth. Coco watched from her filthy bedroom window. She rubbed her feet on the warm radiator and tightened her dressing gown. Gazing outside she smiled as she watched the fingers of the trees turning white. The sun was waking and the emerald green grass was slowly disappearing. Within minutes the green had disappeared and the ground was now a carpet of white. Coco jumped up like a kangaroo and started dashing around her bedroom. She grabbed a ruby red scarf and placed it on the carpet by her door. She frantically searched her desk and grinned as she located her sunglasses, turning she threw them on top of the scarf. Coco dashed to the top of the stairs and bellowed.
“ MUM ... have we got any carrots?”
